TATTERED AND YELLOW

Ancient Records of Prince Wil liam Extend Back to the Year 1700.

CURIOUS PICTURE OF TIMES

Men Were Hanged for Forgery and Ducking-Stool Was in Use.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20.—Several hours spent the other fay in looking over the old yellow records of Prince William county in the courthouse at Manassas proved a most profitable investment. The records of the county extend back nearly to 1700, and the entries in the minute book of the court, especially, are as interesting as chapters from the most thrilling of modern historical nevels. Then there are the deeds, written in a hand as clear to-day as copy plate, though nearly two centuries have passed into history since the lines were penned. The paper is somewhat yellowed, but it appears little worn, and the bindings of the big leather-covered books is as strong as ever it was. I could not help contrasting those volumes, still stout and well preserved, the ink as bright as it was a hundred and more years ago, with the records of to-day which are dimmed in a few years, the paper in tatters after a half-dozen handlings, and bindings gone before they have become familiar.

Curious Entries.

It I started to tell of some of the cupentries in the minute books of the ty. One which surprised me more any I found, was of date 1743. It ed that a slave, Tom Bolling, was mited to the grand jury for having in a silver spoon of the value of five days, from a house in the night time, grand jury returned a true bill, a was summoned, and the trial of the oproceeded. The jury returned a let of guilty, and the hidge proceed sentence the negro to be hanged by neck until he was dead. In the took of the next month's session of court is this entry: "The sheriff red that he had bung Tom Bolling by neck until he was dead."

McKinley. It read about this way: "You had better do as the judge tells you, or you will have to go to jad!."

"It is not known that the negro returned to the courthouse.

In looking over those old deed books, I was surprised to find such a large proportion of the clizens of the county in colonial days who were illitorate. Perhaps a majority of the signatures are made by other than the persons interested to the county in colonial days who were illitorate. Perhaps a majority of the signatures are made by other than the persons interested by Judge for Judge tells you, or you will have to go to jad!."

Hanged for Forgery.

Hanged for Forgery.

I have not been able to learn whether there were any executions in this country in the nineteenth century for forgery or counterfeiting. But Samuel Cook, an old man $4 years of age, was hanged at Johnstown, N. Y., on June 17, 1781, for the crime of forgery.

In 1787 William Clark was put to death the Nechtschein, Man for forgery, and in 187 William Clark was put to death at Northampton, Mass., for forgery, and in the same year Charles Rose and Jona-than Bly were executed at Lenox, Mass., for robbery, Johnson Green was hanged at Worcester, Mass., in 1786 for having in the space of one-half mile.

Samuel Burt, a somewhat distinguished citizen of a Massachusetta town, the name of which is not recalled, was convicted of forgery in 1787, and the court, in view of his previously good charac-ter and high standing in the community offered him banishment in lieu of death The prisoner refused the alternative, say-ing that he realized the helmousness of his crime. That death was its just pun-ishment, and that life would hold not b-ing for him after conviction, as he could not hope to claim the hand of the woman not hope to claim the hand of the woman he loved. He was thereupon sentenced to die on the gallows, and was executed. Though I have been unable to find that Though I have been unable to find that the death sentence was visited upon a forger in the last century in the United States, the records show that on January 15, 1801, one Hawkins was made to stand an hour in the pillory in Washington street, Boston, and then to have one ear cut off for this crime.

The death sentence was not carried our nearly so often in the Southern colonies as it was in New England. Twenty-six pirates from the sloops Ranger and nies as it was in New England. Twentysix piraises from the sloops Ranger and Fortune were hanged at Newport, Rhode Island, Friday, July 19, 1723. An execution. Ten other prisoners were tried at the same time, but it was proven to the satisfaction of the jury that they had been forced to enter the service of the pirate captains. When two men are put to death at the same time in these days the event its considered worthy of the pirate captains. When two men are put to death at the same time in these days the event is considered worthy of hig headlines; iwenty-six would tax the resources of the composing room of the yellowest paper in the country.

Though, as I have said, the New England colonies what with burning witches and counterfeiters and pirates, took more lives than did the colonies farther south, to Georgia belongs the distinction of having clung longest to the ducking-stool. It is recorded that at a session of the superior court held at Milledge, ville, Ga., in 1811, a Mrs. Palmer, who was "gilb of the tongue," as the record quaintly expresses it, was sentenced to be publicly ducked in the Oconee river for being a common scold. The sentence was executed.

The Ducking Stool.

The Ducking Stool.

I am setting far away from Manassas, but the mention of the duckingstool brings me back. In one of the minute books of the court, dated 1762, there is an entry stating that the court had awarded to two men the contract to erect a duckingstool on Quantico creek. Judge J. B. T. Thornton. Commonwealth's attorney of Prince William county, told me he had frequently had pointed out to him the title of this old duckingstool. Various entries in the minutes of the court show that the stool was frequently used.

Bishop Meade, in his "Old Churches," says there was a law against scoids and slanderers, and mentions an instance in which a woman was ducked three times in James river for one or other of these offences.

There are two banks, one of them a comparatively new one. They are both in excellent condition, and while the new one now has nearly as much business as the old, the old is doing as well as it did before the new was established. There are a dozen Churches at Manassas, more to the size of the place than any other town in the State has, probably. The town has grown wonderfully in the past decade. One-third of the houses appear to be new ones, and residences are being erected all the time.

The public library of Manassas is the best in Virginia, beyond doubt, taking the size of the place into account. Mr. Carnegte has interested hinself in it, and has given a considerable sum of money for its support. It is located in the school building, which by the way, is one of the prettiest houses in a town where pretty situatures are the pride of the place. It would be a credit to places many times the size of Manassas.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord
When love has bound the heart.
'Tis hard, so hard, to speak the word,
'We must forever part.'
Dearest loved one we have laid thee
In the peaceful grave's embrace,
But thy memory will be cherished
Till we see thy heavenly face.
